DON'T FORGET FACTS.

Goebel Lies Compel a True Statement of Goebel's Crime.

Louisville Evening Post.

THE TRUTH OF HISTORY.

We find in The Sun of Morgantown the following misleading paragraph: "When Goebel was charged with the murder of Senator Sandford Governor Brown offered him a pardon, but he refused it on the grounds that he was innocent, and therefore ready to be tried before a Jury of his peers. Not so with Taylor and the others charged with the murder of Governor Goebel. They, too, declare themselves innocent, but accept pardons, or 'any old thing,' that will prevent their cases ever being called in Court."

"Charged with the murder of Sandford," Goebel killed Sandford, but he was never indicted and was never tried. The facts of the difficulty between Goebel and Sandford were not given to the public at the time. Mr. Blackburn avowed that he would see justice done, but he never did. Goebel went free, not even being subjected to the annoyance of an indictment.

It is true, that when a subsequent effort was made to indict Mr. Goebel, Governor Brown, assuming that it was persecution, conveyed to Mr. Goebel the assurance that if indicted he would be pardoned. The pardon was not delivered, because no steps were taken to make it necessary to tender it.

But at that time Governor Brown was guided merely by the facts given to the public relative to the circumstances; the provocation that led to the encounter was sedulously concealed.

The Evening Post is willing to let the dead past bury its dead. Goebel and Sandford have met before the great judgment bar. Each, in our judgment, was most foully slain, but the assassin of Goebel did not attack Goebel's character, as a preliminary to his deed of murder, as Goebel attacked the character of Sandford.

If Mr. Goebel's friends will keep referring to the story of his relations with Sandford they must expect to have the story retold from the documents now in existence.

Mr. Goebel was Senator. His ambition to be Judge of the Court of Appeals had been thwarted by the opposition of Mr. Sandford. Mr. Goebel and Mr. Sandford had been friends until a misunderstanding of a serious kind arose at a Convention in Louisville.

On April 6th, 1895, Mr. Goebel published in The Covington Ledger an article attacking the personal character of Sandford, making an insinuation of the most infamous kind, as unfounded as it was infamous. The article was not written hastily, but carefully and deliberately. It was constructed so as to be as vicious as possible, and Mr. Goebel knew that it would provoke an encounter.

Mr. Sandford was a noted marksman. When the two men met Sandford, to be sure he was after the man who had written the article, asked Goebel if he was the author of the article. Goebel admitted it either in word or by a nod; two shots were fired almost simultaneously. Sandford fell with a shot in his brain; Goebel had a mere scratch.

That is the story. The important part of it is the provocation, and the preparations the provocation implied.

That article did not touch at all on any public act of Colonel Sandford. It did not deal with any business transaction. It was an assault on his personal character, a stab at his personal honor, so vicious and vile that it cannot be published.

Yes; Governor Brown assured Mr. Goebel, when he thought him the victim of persecution, for merely defending himself, that he would pardon him. But Mr. Goebel was not a victim; he was the aggressor. He struck cowardly at all a man holds dear, and then killed his enemy when the inevitable encounter came.

That is the story, and when the Democratic newspapers of the state write it they must write it all.
